

MITCH EVANS, 26, CONSULTANT FOR MAJER RECRUITMENT

★ AT WORK

I was signed to the New York Yankees farm system in 1998 when I was 17. I spent three years playing baseball for them; two years in Florida and one year in New York, not with the big team but with their A ball team. I took a couple of years off then went to play pro in Europe and last year I was in Canada playing in a North American pro league. I got into recruitment because I spent a year in London, and recruitment was really the only thing a washed-up ball player can get into there without having any experience. After that year I came home and continued in recruitment before returning to baseball. I work for Majer Recruitment. My body has finally told me at the tender age of 26 it's time to take a break as I have a broken

A sense of achievement from helping others complements an active urban lifestyle wrist, a dislocating shoulder and bad knees; not to mention way too many concussions from collisions at the plate. My initial recruitment training in London consisted of calling a list of hospitals from A-Z until I found a job; then it was all about trying to convince someone to go to this job even if they really didn't want to. In my role now I ensure that both clients and candidates are provided with the highest levels of end-to-end service. I also work with the owner Suzie Majer to develop the business, maintain the team culture and improve customer service where possible. I love being able to help people on a daily basis. Our candidates come from diverse backgrounds and have very different personalities, which makes it interesting and fun.

★ AT HOME

I live in an apartment in the city. I am lucky enough to enjoy the fantastic views of the Story Bridge and Brisbane River that we get from our balcony on the 20th floor. I enjoy running along the boardwalk and into the Botanic Gardens, and the convenience of living in the middle of the city and walking to work. And, of course, not catching a cab on a Saturday night!

★ AT PLAY

I like to remain pretty active when I'm not at work, so you can find me at the gym or playing golf. I also like to take advantage of our inner city location by dining out at all the great new restaurants and cafes with my beautiful wife, Erin.

Michelle Collins
collinsmi@qnp.newsltd.com.au